The tug Fearless had a narrow escape from being rammed by the transport Buford yesterday, as the latter vessel was returning to the Naval wharf after having made a futile start for the Coast with the Sheridan. The Fearless was backing off the marine railway, assisted by the tugboat, and swung across the channel just as the Buford came along. At the same time the tug Slocum backed out from the Naval wharf and blocked up the rest of the channel. The Buford's engines were reversed and she went full speed astern, pointing her bows toward the Fearless amidships. She came to a stop with her bow not over six feet from the Fearless.

SHERIDAN OFF FOR THE COAST TODAY

How Injured Transport Is Being Towed Back Home

The Sheridan will probably make another attempt to get away for San Francisco this afternoon. When she broke her windlass yesterday, it was thought that she could not leave before tomorrow morning, on account of the time that would be required to make a new casting. But it was discovered that the Iron Works had a casting already on hand which, with a little work, could be made to serve. This was immediately got ready, and this morning the Slocum went out with it to have it put in place. Some hours will be required for this, but it is expected that the fleet can sail some time this afternoon.

The accident to the Sheridan's windlass was caused by the fact that Captain Smith of the Slocum, who is not familiar with these waters, directed the Sheridan to anchor where the water was too deep for the anchor to reach the bottom. The vessel drifted back until she reached water that was shallow enough for the anchor to catch.

For the first time in several months the Naval wharf is deserted, except for the tug Inoquoia. The Sheridan has been here since the 21st of August, including the time she was on the reef at Barber's Point and again at Pearl Harbor, and she seemed almost a fixture. The Buford, which originally came from the coast to take back the Sheridan's passengers, but was diverted to Midway to bring to Honolulu those of the Mongolia, has been here almost as long.

Some time ago doubts were expressed as to the safety of the Sheridan when she went to sea again, but the temporary repairs made to her have been so thorough that those in command of her and the other vessels of the little fleet are confident she will come to no harm on her homeward voyage. The people of Honolulu have come to look upon the Sheridan, because of her long stay here and of her experience on this coast, with almost as great a feeling of proprietorship as they do upon the Alameda, and everybody will wish her and Captain Peabody good luck.

On account of the extensive repairs that will have to be made to the Sheridan, it will probably be several months before she returns to this port.

The Sheridan and her consort sail with the Slocum, which leads, connected with the Buford by a 6-inch steel hawser 1200 feet in length. Under ordinary conditions, 300 feet of this will be used, with 90 feet of chain. The remaining 300 feet is for use should circumstances require it.

The Buford's to the Sheridan is by two lines,—one a 700 foot hawser of 15-inch Manila, with 200 feet of 4 1/2-inch steel cable and 100 feet of chain; the other 700 feet of 12 inch hawser with 200 feet of steel cable. These lines are both stationary.

Captain Humphrey, who for about three years has been depot quartermaster at Honolulu, goes in charge of the fleet. He will not return here, but goes to Washington for medical treatment, and later will probably be assigned to sea service for the benefit of his health.

Mr. Sture goes on the Buford in charge of the tow, under Captain Humphrey. Mr. Sture has had practical charge of wrecking operations in connection with rescuing the Sheridan, and it is very largely owing to his efforts and the excellent work he did that the transport is able to return to San Francisco.

John Donnelly, superintendent of engineers, is in charge of the pump and rigging on the Sheridan.

WIFE FORGIVES AND MAKAI IS LET OFF

Police Court Grinds Usual Grind This Morning

If Nobokuhiwai Wainee were not possessed of that spirit of forgiveness and forbearance that is the distinguishing characteristic of womankind of all races and colors, Makai Wainee might not have got off so easily this morning when he appeared in Judge Whitney's court charged with assault and battery on his wife and with malicious injury. Makai seems to think that the proper way to control a woman is to beat her. Also, he vents his displeasure when things go wrong or his liver gets out of order by smashing the furniture.

Nobokuhiwai might stand a beating once in a while. But when Makai started in to break things, and smashed up two of her tables, it was too much. Bruises will get well, but time does not heal cracked table legs.

Therefore the wife appeared at the police station yesterday and swore out warrants charging Makai with assault and battery and with malicious injury, and the police went out and brought the destructively inclined one in.

Either Makai is possessed of strong persuasive powers or Nobokuhiwai relented over night, for this morning she appeared in Police Court and told Judge Whitney that she had changed her mind; that she and Makai had kissed and made up and that she wanted him let off this time.

Judge Whitney thought that if she could stand it, he could; so he reprimanded Makai, and the once more happy family departed joyously.

The case of Lizzie Gouveia, who is charged by her husband, Frank Gouveia, with infidelity, the other man being Manuel Marques, was continued this morning until the 19th.

The case of Li Yum Kwai, charged with embezzling the sum of $600 from his mother, Li Chan Shee, has been postponed for ten days more.

Kimura is another destructively inclined Oriental whose habit of breaking things has got him into trouble. Shimizu swore out a warrant yesterday charging him with smashing two of her plates.

Brady Clemmons, a very big, very black and very much plain negro, occupied a bench in Judge Whitney's court this morning. His head was bound up in bandages which hid the injuries which he claims Alexander Garner inflicted upon him with a hatchet. He was there to tell the court how it all happened, but he didn't get the chance, for the case was continued to next Wednesday afternoon.

Garner will also have to face a charge of using vulgar and indecent language. Mollie Nash claims that he applied epithets to her which no lady should stand for. The epithets aforementioned are quoted in her sworn complaint, but they are not exactly fit for publication.

Koonul connected with too large an amount of that which cheers and also inebriates. The Judge told him that it would cost him the usual three and costs.
